The fourth edition of Photo London closed on Sunday 20 May 2018, having seen strong visitor numbers, significant sales and major acquisitions by international institutions as well as important sales to private collectors. A record number of exhibitors included 108 galleries from 18 countries.

The 2018 Fair saw an increase in institutional attendance, with more than 85 groups including acquisition groups from the world's major museums, visiting from territories that included North America, Europe, Scandinavia, South America, Russia and Canada. Visitors included groups and representatives from Tate; Getty; ICP New York; Guggenheim; Fotomuseum, Winterthur; Yale Centre for British Art; National Gallery, Canada; Qatar Museums; Multimedia Art Museum, Moscow; Musee d'Orsay; Fotografiska; FOMU; Rijksmuseum; FotoFest, Houston; and FOAM.

Many of the participating galleries reported sales to new clients and a number of significant new contacts. Sales of nineteenth century photography and from the Discovery section were especially strong this year. Vintage dealer Roland Belgrave commented 'this kind of business is precisely what makes a successful fair. High end buyers and people that are not the usual clients of vintage photography, a small arena at the best of times.' In the Discovery section new additions to the fair Joanna Bryant & Julian Page (London) and Spazio Nuovo (Rome) were amongst those reporting strong sales to a diverse range of collectors from both Europe and the US.

For the first time this year Photo London created a new space for the Fair on the River Terrace at Somerset House. This new zone included galleries, a Collectors Lounge supported by Leica, a special exhibition space and a new talks auditorium.

For the first time this year the Arts Council of England joined long term partners the Luma Foundation in support of the Photo London Public Programme. Highlights included a special exhibition from Master of Photography Edward Burtynsky, who presented his first Augmented Reality (AR) experience. The AR Installation, AR #1, Scrap Engine and Rims, Agbogbloshie Recycling Yards, Accra, Ghana 2017, invited visitors to explore the recycling of automotive machine parts from a scrap yard in Accra, Ghana. Commenting on his award and the accompanying exhibition Edward Burtynsky said, 'It was an honour to receive the 2018 Master of Photography Award from Photo London. The management and staff worked tirelessly to make my exhibition as good as it could be insuring the experience would be rewarding for the audience. It was a busy four days as thousands came to see the show.'

Sun Pictures Then and Now: Talbot and His Legacy Today, an exhibition curated by Hans P. Kraus Jr., which featured original works by Talbot alongside those by contemporary artists including Hiroshi Sugimoto, Vera Lutter,

Adam Fuss, and Albelardo Morel, was widely regarded as the highlight of the Public Programme. The Bodley's librarian Richard Ovenden (whose organisation will unveil the digital Talbot Catalogue Raisonné later this year) said of the exhibition, 'William Henry Fox Talbot was not only one of the great innovators of the 19th century, developing the science and the art of photography simultaneously, but the strength of his ideas and vision still have profound resonance today. The exhibit at Photo London 2018 brilliantly portrayed the continuing impact of Talbot on the practice of some of the most significant contemporary photographers. What we saw through this show is that despite the ubiquity of the digital image, the spirit of experimentation, and the profundity of the essential elements of the science of photography is still being harnessed in the 21st century to extraordinarily powerful effect.'

Other Public Programme highlights included Darren Almond's epic Fullmoons series presented by White Cube, and Exit from Paradise an exhibition of Korean and Japanese photography by Photo London and SUUM, South Korea.

2018 also saw the return of the Pavilion Commissions with an installation dedicated to the pioneering French photojournalist Gilles Caron, as well as a survey of contemporary Austrian photography and work by Japanese photographer Daido Moriyama presented by Hamiltons.

Es Devlin previewed her Somerset House Commission MASK, a new projection-mapped sculptural work made specifically for Somerset House and Photo London. This work will be on show at Somerset House until Monday 27 August. The installation features an ovoid, mask-shaped concave form sculpturally imprinted with dense urban geometry with a river dividing the map like a mirror-distorted image of a human brain.

Quotes

Michael Benson and Fariba Farshad, Founding Directors of Photo London, said: "Our fourth edition has seen Photo London firmly established as part of the cultural fabric of London and as a key date in the international artworld calendar – presenting the best in the past, present and future of photography to a growing audience. We were delighted by the overall quality of the Fair and were pleased to see that was reflected by many important sales. It was particularly gratifying to see such strong sales in both the Discovery section and in the area of historic photography. We were delighted to present such a strong line-up of both new and returning galleries for the fourth edition, as well as an outstanding Public Programme with leading artists such as Edward Burtynsky, Darren Almond, Hiroshi Sugimoto, Rinko Kawauchi, Vera Lutter and Adam Fuss. It was also very encouraging that our Talks Programme, as ably curated by Bill Ewing, attracted an audience of 2000 people. Our Talks Programme featured conversations between some of the finest photographers of our times including Joel Meyerowitz, Thomas Struth and Terry O'Neill and their popularity illustrates the huge enthusiasm of the London audience to learn from the masters of modern photography... We are looking forward to the fifth edition of Photo London and continuing the Fair's upward trajectory."

Matt Hancock, Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, said: "Over 100 cultural organisations, from grand museums to tiny pop up galleries, were inspired to make their own contribution to Photo London, and thousands of visitors from all over the world, including Mexico, Lebanon, the US and Iran, came to admire the various collections. Photo London is a great shop window for London, for the country and for the talent that we nurture and attract. London has always been one of the world's great cultural capitals, a world-renowned centre of the arts, and so it's wonderful to see initiatives like Photo London boosting that reputation further. In just four years, Photo London has really made its mark on the art world's cultural calendar, as well as London itself."

Philippe Garner, Chair of the Photo London Curatorial Committee, said: "We believe that Photo London has succeeded in presenting an exciting international overview of the ways in which the medium of photography has been explored in recent years, well punctuated with classic reference points from both the distant and more recent past."

Tristan Lund, Curator of the Discovery section said: "The Discovery section received outstanding feedback from day one of the fair, specifically for its high number of solo presentations of emerging artists. Elegant, thoughtful curation was appreciated by collectors, curators and fellow dealers, notably at Budapest's Art+Text with their presentation of avante-garde Hungarian photography from 1965-84. New additions to the fair Joanna Bryant and Julian Page (London) and Spazio Nuovo (Rome) were amongst those who reporting strong sales to a diverse range of collectors from both Europe and the US."

The Geneva-based Pictet Group, one of Europe's leading asset and wealth management organisations, were again sponsors of Photo London. Stephen Barber, Equity Partner of Pictet, said: "We are delighted to be a lead sponsor of the Photo London Fair for the third successive year. Since its launch in 2015, we have seen Photo London blossom into a fixture on the London cultural scene. Its reach and its reputation are equal with the best in global photography gatherings."

Jonathan Reekie, Director of Somerset House Trust, said: "Somerset House is proud to be the home of Photo London and it is now firmly established as an annual highlight of the Somerset House calendar. We look forward to welcoming the Fair back in the years to come."

Gallery Responses

Peter Fetterman, Peter Fetterman Gallery (Santa Monica):

"Photo London was very productive for us. Within 5 minutes of opening we sold David Montgomery's tender photographs of Her Royal Highness The Queen and Richard Corman's powerful and haunting portraits of Jean Michel Basquiat. The organisers did a great job of organising such a special event for lovers of photography."

James Hyman, James Hyman Gallery (London):

"We were delighted to be back again at Photo London and to be part of such a dynamic week. For lovers of photography it's become a really special time to be in London. Once again, we presented works from the earliest days of photography, including a recently discovered William Henry Fox Talbot and an important group of Edouard Baldus Salt Prints – through to colour works by British photographers Anna Fox and Paul Reas. At the heart of our display were major works by Harry Callahan, Bill Brandt and Andre Kertesz which received particular attention. Selling important vintage works remains a challenge in London, unlike Paris and New York, but we were pleased by the response."

Robert Morat, Robert Morat Galerie (Berlin):

"We are happy to report very strong sales this year at Photo London. Roger Eberhard's large format landscape piece titled 'Hadrian's Wall' was sold out of its edition by lunch time on opening day and we continued to sell well throughout the week. Bill Jacobson's still-life studies from his project 'Place (Series)' were another bestseller for us this week. We really are very happy with the results of the Fair this year."

Sophie Wright, Global Cultural Director, Magnum Photos:

"The Fair offers us an opportunity to refresh people's perception of Magnum Photos and we're happy that Photo London's visitors this year have both engaged with and bought the classic names and the new generation of Magnum photographers."

Bryce Wolkowitz, Bryce Wolkowitz Gallery (New York):

"We had a very positive experience at this edition of Photo London and it continues to be a major attraction for the photo community here in Europe. Sales were strong and we met a great number of new collectors and curators."

Michael Hoppen, Michael Hoppen Gallery (London):

"All our artists found clients interested in their works at the fair which was well attended. We were delighted to see the new Discovery section with very strong works."

Robert Hershowitz, Robert Hershkowitz Ltd (Lindfield – London)

“We had our best fair yet in terms of sales and have had many visitors appreciating the work we show.”

Roland Belgrave, Roland Belgrave Vintage Photography (Brighton)

“A thoroughly enjoyable fair with a huge diversity of visiting clients. I noticed an increase in US Institutional presence and have two works currently on hold. I was also happy to sell to new clients - this kind of business is precisely what makes a successful fair. High end buyers and people that are not the usual clients of vintage photography, a small arena at the best of times.”

Joanna Bryant & Julian Page (London)

“This is our first time at Photo London and the first time that we have shown Nikolai Ishchuk at a photography fair. Nikolai’s work has an evident overlap with painting and sculpture, but starts from photography, so it has been fascinating to show it to this specific collector base. The reaction has been tremendous and we have seen some strong and immediate sales.”

Rose Gallery (Santa Monica)

“The definition of photography is changing all the time from 19th century's British 'father of photography' William Henry Fox Talbot's salted paper prints to 21st century's Antony Cairns' images made by hacking into digital e readers----the plethora of riches in photography presented by Photo London is a 'must' experience for anyone drawn to historical and contemporary photographs.”

Spazio Nuovo (Rome)

“Spazio Nuovo is extremely happy with its first participation at the Discovery section...our extremely curated solo show dedicated to Marco Maria Zanin, imagined as a small exhibition was a great success from both, a curatorial and a commercial point of view”
